Theories of Grief – HSCNI Bereavement Network

Most of these treatment studies have seemed to emphasize the cause of a loved one's death as a primary complicating risk factor in grief (e.g., miscarriage, suicide, AIDS complications). While it is true that the particular cause of death may be a significant factor in an individual's development of complicated grief, the case study that will be discussed here suggests that, perhaps, the disruption in the attachment narrative between the bereaved and the deceased may play a more central

Grief | Psychology Today

Everyone experiences grief in their own unique way but emotional support for the grieving party is an essential component for overcoming grief. Support comes from family and friends, but can also come from a professional bereavement counsellor who is able to offer non-judgmental understanding, a listening ear, and a practical way forward.

Mapping interventions for children and young people ...

Research has suggested that, in some people, grief comes in stages or as a cycle. The grief cycle as a whole is sometimes referred to as 'mourning' and describes how people adapt following a loss. It is a completely individual process but can be influenced by things such as culture, customs, rituals and social expectations.
