This collection of essays explores a fascinating subject during a key period: the painting of landscape in France between 1870 and 1914, the years in which modern art took shape. Posing challenging questions, the distinguished contributors throw light on how representing the land acted as a vehicle for developing modern styles of painting, conveyed ideas about contemporary society, and was used by artists to mold the image of themselves. Landscape painting was a battleground, fought over by avant-garde and conservative artists, as well as the Left and Right in French politics. An image of the French countryside in a radical style could convey traditional values and vice versa. From Impressionism to Cubism, via artists as celebrated as Monet, Van Gogh and Cézanne and as neglected as Maurice Denis, Henri Martin and Roger de la Fresnaye, these essays argue for the central place of landscape painting in the development of modern art in France.

Two societies, two conceptions of justice, collaborated and collided when French forces stormed Cartagena of the Indies in May 1697. For their commander, the baron de Pointis, a naval captain in the mould of Drake, this bloody if strategically pointless success fulfilled a long-postponed design "that might be both honourable and advantageous", with ships lent and soldiers (but not seamen) paid by the King, who in return would take the Crown's usual one-fifth interest in such "preis de vaisseaux", the remaining costs falling on private subscribers, in this case no less than 666 of them, headed by courtiers, financiers, naval contractors and officers of both pen and sword.' According to Pointis, peace rumours restricted the flow of advances and the expedition, nearly 4,000 strong when it sailed out of Brest, was weaker than he had planned, especially if it should prove difficult to use the ships' crews ashore.

Quelle personne saine d'esprit envisagerait aujourd'hui de s'offrir « comme victime d'holocauste à l'Amour miséricordieux » ? Ces mots, trop chargés d'histoires tragiques, restent encore énigmatiques. C'est dire combien Thérèse de l'Enfant-Jésus peut paraître éloignée de nous. Et pourtant, sans ce point de départ de juin 1895 dont il faut à tout prix restituer la portée, toute son évolution spirituelle, d'une soudaine révélation à une ardente prédication, serait incompréhensible, comme le serait aussi sa découverte d'un Dieu dont la justice se fait miséricordieuse, dont la paternité devient maternelle. malgré son entêtement durable, à sa fonction de messagère d'une doctrine qu'elle confie, au printemps 1897, en plusieurs versions parallèles, à ses sœurs carmélites et plus encore à ses frères missionnaires. Une étude majeure de cette année de la Miséricorde.
