Mergers and Acquisitions □ M&A Definition

What are mergers and acquisitions? Mergers. A merger occurs when two companies, commonly of a similar size, combine to form a new business with control typically being shared equally. The process is instigated by the companies' directors, and must be approved by shareholders. A key consideration when carrying out a merger is the equitable treatment of staff and other stakeholders.

Mergers, asset purchases and equity purchases are each taxed differently, and the most beneficial structure for tax purposes is highly situation-dependent. One hybrid form often employed for tax purposes is a triangular merger, where the target company merges with a shell company wholly owned by the buyer, thus becoming a subsidiary of the buyer.
