In the August 2011 issue of Wired magazine, Clive Thompson reminds us of “The Breakthrough Myth”—that most innovations happen overnight or take us by surprise. This belief is myth because real cultural changes have been “percolating in plain sight for years.”. Such is the case with the seemingly sudden loss of privacy in the age of new media.

In his new book Privacy in the New Media Age (University Press of Florida 2015), Jon L. Mills (University of Florida, Levin College of Law), discusses another issue related to privacy in the digital environment: the conflict between privacy and freedom of expression. In so doing, Mills examines how the law, particularly in the United States, is always chasing advances in technology, and discusses how countries in the European Union have attempted to tackle this matter.
