It appears to me that as the church wrestles with how to respond to COVID-19, that it is helpful for individuals and communities to develop and/or review our personal theologies of leadership during difficult times. Developing and having a personal theology of leadership is helpful because those who internalize their prayerful study have a foundation to direct their actions.

There may be local variations of church leadership because this is only a basic pattern; every detail is not prescribed in Scripture. The basic pattern found in the New Testament is that every church should have a plurality of godly male elders who are responsible for leading and teaching the church and godly deacons who are responsible for facilitating the more physical aspects of church ministry.

What is the biblical pattern of church leadership ...

The pastor always has the good of the people in mind. Pastoral leadership is not self-serving. The pastor's desire is that healing and wholeness occur in the lives of the individuals and the systems to which he gives care. Likewise, the people of the congregation believe the pastoral leader has their good in mind.

However, the global and cultural expectations placed on leaders in all spheres of vocation demand that Christians have a unique answer that draws from our understanding of the nature of God, reflects the person of Christ, and is guided by the Holy Spirit. This is the conversation that the Theology of Leadership Journal hopes to spark. Much like the journal's logo, it is the editors' hope that theology and leadership will create a spectrum that bleeds into each other.

If the church's training program is weak, those leaders whom God has gifted must assume responsibility for improving it. Training is a theological idea. It is not optional in the church; rather, it is a vital part of what it means to be truly the church. The church that ignores or depreciates training ministries does so at its own risk.

The Mission Theology Advisory Group (MTAG) is a group of people who wonder about how God works in the world (theology) and who try to join in with what God is doing (mission). We help all kinds of people to do the same. The mission of the Church is the mission of Christ We can see this when Christians demonstrate these five 'marks' of mission:

leadership implying that it is not within their purview and, in effect, convey the message that if a minister understands the nature of God and the doctrines of faith, that is enough.²⁴ Yet extensive work by authors such as Welch, Barna, and Schwarz into the declining effectiveness of church leaders demonstrates that theological education alone

TOWARD A THEOLOGY OF LEADERSHIP

The Church as a Context for Leadership: Although every institution requires leadership, there is no greater context in which leadership is needed than within the Kingdom of God. Church leadership is challenging and often imposing, yet in God's service leaders are born and aspire to heights unknown in all other endeavors.

The following is a portion of a chapter I wrote in Biblical Leadership: Theology for the Everyday Leader (Edited by Benjamin K. Forrest and Chet Roden, Grand Rapids: Kregel, 2017). The section below is the conclusion to the chapter. In the earlier part of the chapter, I survey positive and negative aspects of the leadership of Saul, David, and Solomon.
